CUB TROUBLE

BIG BROTHER BEAR loved Little Brother Bear very much, but, like so many good brothers, he also liked to tease him. He teased him for all sorts of silly things, for things he should do as well as things he should not do!

One day, for instance, Little Brother Bear pressed down too hard on his pencil when he was drawing, and he broke the point of his pencil. Big Brother teased: "Uh oh! Just for that, the Gollypoddle will catch you!"

"Boo hoo! Boo hoo!" cried Little Brother Bear. Of course, he didn't know what a Gollypoddle was, but it must be something awful and he certainly didn't want to be caught by one!

"Ha ha ha!" laughed Big Brother Bear. "Can't you take a joke?"

No, Little Brother Bear couldn't take a joke, it seemed. Because this wasn't funny to him. He had no way of telling whether or not his brother was serious about the Gollypoddle. It was only one day after he broke his pencil that his big brother saw him gayly bouncing his ball on the sidewalk. "Uh oh! You're denting a public sidewalk! The Gollypoddle wouldn't like THAT!" he teased.

"Boo hoo! Boo hoo hoo!" Little Brother cried.

Several weeks later, Big Brother really played a terrible trick on his younger brother. A lot of bear cubs were fishing down at the river. All of a sudden Big Brother's line and Little Brother's line got taut at the same time. This meant they had each caught something! Big Brother pulled his line in and on the end of it was an old, rusty pail! Little Brother pulled his line in and—what do you think! —he had caught a great, big trout! This was too much for Big Brother, so what did he do? You're right! He began teasing again!

"A trout!" he exclaimed. "You'd better give that to me! Don't you know that only Gollypoddles are allowed to catch trout?"

Little Brother quickly handed the trout to his brother. At the same time he began to feel a little funny inside. What if the Gollypoddle found out!

To make matters worse, Big Brother didn't throw the trout back in the river. Instead, he put it on his own hook, put his fishing pole over his shoulder, and sauntered home with it! Now the Gollypoddle would surely see the trout and think Big Brother caught it, and Little Brother didn't want HIM to get in trouble. He was really worried! He couldn't get to sleep that night.

And when he finally did fall asleep, he began to dream about Gollypoddles! He was forever being chased by things that must be Gollypoddles, though he never ever caught a glimpse of one. He was chased for eating an ice cream cone. In another dream a Gollypoddle told him he should never walk pigeon-toed; that he shouldn't pet a pussy cat and he shouldn't play with an ant. He should not even wear his raincoat when it rains!

Things might have gone on this way all year if Little Brother hadn't taken a short cut home from kindergarten one afternoon. He turned down a little lane that led through the woods, expecting to come out on his own street. But when he finally got out of the woods again, he was at the other end of town!

"Oh me, oh my, where AM I?" he wondered.

The poor little cub wandered up one street and down another. He was getting nowhere. Nothing looked familiar. He got more and more frightened. He began to whimper. Suddenly a big hand grasped his shoulder!

"Oh! Oh! Oh, dear!" cried Little Brother, when he looked up and saw who it was. It was a Gollypoddle, all right! An enormous Gollypoddle! The little bear cub blinked his eyes to make sure that this wasn't just another one of his bad dreams. But no—it was true! "P-p-please don't hurt me! P-p-please—"

"I'm a policeman, Sonny! Why should I hurt a nice, little fellow like you?" The policeman patted the bear cub on his head. "Now tell me why you are crying."

Little Brother Bear wiped away his tears and sniffed. "I—I—I'm l-l-lost!"

"Well, well, well," the policeman smiled kindly. "Don't you worry. That's what policemen are for—to take care of little fellows like you. You come down to the station house with me and we'll phone your folks. You'll be home before you know it!" The policeman held out his hand and the little cub reached up for it; it was big and warm and friendly.

At the police station, Little Brother had a most marvelous time! The policeman put him up on a high desk. Then all the other policemen stood around talking to him as if he were very important indeed. They gave him candy to eat. They even let him sit in the police car and listen to the police calls. It was all very exciting. Little Brother was having so much fun that he hardly noticed when the door opened and his big brother walked in.

"Little Brother! Oh, Little Brother Bear!" he cried as he lifted the little cub off the high desk and gave him a great, big hug. Then he said, fondly, "Golly, Little Brother, I missed you! Don't ever get yourself lost again! I'd be awfully lonesome with no Little Brother!" And he squeezed his hand affectionately.

Little Brother beamed happily. He offered Big Brother some of his candy, and they walked out holding hands. On the way home, Big Brother swore to Little Brother that he would never, never tease him again. And he never did.

So, from then on, daytimes were loads of fun. But even MORE fun for Little Brother, were the nights! He loved to go to sleep and dream delightful dreams. And he never heard of Gollypoddles again.—There probably never were such things!
